Captain Dan Beck, formerly a well known sen captain, but who has for some years past been totally blind, arrived in the city yesterday. The captain is now engaged in a philasshropic work, and is endeavoring to have established an institute for the blind at Seattle, where those from Utah, Montana, Idaho and Washinston who are similarly affected may earn enough by the manufacture of articles necessary on sea going vessels to maintain themselves. At present there is no home for the adult blind between Callfornia and Minnesota, Captain Beck yesterday met President Woodruff, Governor Wells and other prominent citizens, and with a view to interesting our people he will, on Thursday high; deliver a lecture at the Assembly hall on "What a Blind Man Saw Off Cape Horn." There will be no charge for admission, but a collection will be taken up at the close.

AT THE GRAND.—The Grand wore a decidedly gala appearance last night, all the boxes being draped in red, white and blue in honor of the caratral, for the benefit of which "Camille" was given; the cast was the same as during last week, except that Miss Gleason filled the place of Misa Cook and that her role was filled prettily by Julia Dean. The play was as excellently rendered as ever, but the interest centered in the fourth act—the gaming scene—where Miss Jean Russell and Miss Vilate Peart, the two yourg ladies who are leading in the vote for queen of the carnival, walked on as guesia, excerted, Miss Russell by Lieutenant Castle and Miss Peart by Lieutenant Simmons. Both ladies were handsomely attired and both looked very charming, Miss Russell being as decided a blonde as M'ss Peart in a brunette. The applause the was couples received quke stopped the progress of the play, and as long as they were on the stage, it is to be feared the audience had not many eyes for the fine acting of Miss Kennark and Mr. Brinker, The attendance was fair, the receipts being about $100. Frank Mayo appeared so recently in this city—less than a month ago—and the impression he left was so marked, that the news of his death will be received with especial sadness here. No production in years has made so pronounced a success as "Puddin-head Wilsom," and that this was so is due first to Mayo's rare delineation of the leading part, and next to his all-pervading presence in the stage direction of the play; the way in which he had worked out the minutest details, and built up the various characters, was something little short of wonderful. Mr. Mayo was not quite 64, and to all appearances was a hale and hearty man. Those who knew him best, however, say that for years he has complained of strange pains in his side, in the region of his heart. On the night when he closed his Salt Lake engagement he said to the writter in his dressing room that he had not known what it was to obtain ed of strange pains in his side, in the region of his heart. On the night when he closed his Salt Lake engagement he said to the writer in his dressing room that he had not known what it was to obtain more than an hour's rest any night he had been in Salt Lake; as soon as he retired to his bedroom at the hote, he said, a sharp pain in his side would bring him to his feet, and he walked the floor several nights till morning. He attributed it to indigestion, and poot-pooled the suggestions of physicians who said his heart was affected. Mr. and Mrs. Harold Russell, who were close friends of Mr. Mayo, and who entertained him during his visit here, were inexpressiblly shocked last evening to learn of his death. Mr. Russell, who had played in his company for some time, and for whom he wrote the part of Roxy, said it was one of the saidest occurrences that could be imagined. Mayo had tolied so many years in the face of adverse fortune, had known such long and repeaked discouragements, that his death now, just as the tide of fortune had turned, was terribly distressing, without doubt. Pladdin'-head, just as he trained in his previous misfortunes as actor and manager. It was his idea to train his son, Edwin F. Mayo, in the part of Puddin'-head, just as he trained him in the role of Davy Crockett, in which the young man starred with not very great success some years after his father laid the play on the shelf. Young Mayo was recently playing in "The Heart of Maryland" in New York, but he gave up his part to go to the bedried of his mother, who has long been an invalid. Mrs. Russell fears the news of her husband's death will be apt to prove a fatal shock to her.

Mr. Mayo had the reputation of being as just and upright a man us he was a fatal and plaintiff's at $5,000, and designed that the great and upright a man us he was a fatal and plaintiff's at $5,000, and designed that the great was affected. ON MOTION OF PROSECUTION

FOR FURTHERANCE OF JUSTICE AND INSUFFICIENT EVIDENCE.

Damage Suit of Joseph Dederichs Against Salt Lake City Railroad Company on Trinl-A Bingham Mining Suit Before Judge Ritchie Short Rulings, Probate Orders and Court Notes.

The seven indictments against Melvin E. Cummings, in which he was charged with embezzlement from the Utah Commercial and Savings bank, while he was cashier of the bank, were dismissed on motion of County Attorney Whittemore. The reason given for the dismissals is "for the furtherance of justice and because the state is unable to obtain sufficient evidence upon which to obtain a conviction."

County Attorney Whittemore made an investigation of the whole matter. an investigation of the whole matter and came to the conclusion that the best thing to do was to wipe out the whole of the indictments. The civil suits which Mr. Cummings brought against the bank are still pending, but it is very probable that matters will so be arranged that it will never com-

DAMAGE SUIT.

Dederichs Against Salt Lake City Rallway on Trial.

The trial of the damage suit of Joseph Dederichs against the Salt Lake City Railway company was commenced before Judge Street and a jury yesterday, with Shepherd & Cherry appearing for the plaintiff and Rawlins & Critchlow for the defendant company. The complaint sets forth that on October 1, 1891, the plaintiff was traveling in a one-horse vehicle and when crossing the street car track of the defendant company at Fighth East and Second South streets the bind and of Second South streets, the hind end of his vehicle was struck by car No. 40, the consequence being that the plain-tiff was violently thrown to the ground with such force that one of his ribs was fractured, one of his teeth broken, his face and body bruised, and he was also injured internally. The plaintiff alleges the accident was caused by the carelessness of the company in running its car at an unlawful rate of speed, viz: twenty-two miles an hour, and in falling to give any signal of its approach by ringing the bell or sounding the gong. Plaintiff asked for $10,130 damages.

The defendants alleged that the accident arose from the carelessness of the plaintiff himself and prayed that the action be dismissed. The case came up for trial on April 17, 1895, and the plaintiff was non-suited. The plaintiff was granted a new trial on appeal to the supreme court, and came in acran vestorial.

The trial was proceeding when court adjourned at 5 o'clock until this morn-
